

Why choosing a NAPIT Registered Electrician?

The majority of my customers don't understand what registered electrician actually means or part P trained or fully qualified. However, most customers have heard of the NAPIT and feel these 'letters' mean something good and they should look for them when searching for an electrician.

Whilst the true meaning of what the NAPIT does or means never springs to mind in 90% of cases, it is known for being a mark of quality and a safe, high standard of workmanship is achieved by the registered electrician. This is huge peace of mind for customers who struggle to find the right electrician and cannot be expected to understand the meaning of the Part P building regulation.

So why have I always been and always will be a NAPIT Registered electrician? Quite simply, it is for my customers peace of mind, not just for the fact they recognise the NAPIT as a mark of quality but also for my belief in each and every job being carried out to the same high standard and ensuring customer satisfaction at the end.

The reason why I started Solid Electrics Limited was to fill a huge gaping hole in the domestic market. As an electrician with over 20 years experience it frustrated me to see the lack of care and attention on electrical work being carried out in people's homes. It is my goal to provide a comprehensive electrical service that is friendly, efficient and geared towards helping home owners and small businesses in Southampton and the surrounding areas!

There are currently more than 16,000 NAPIT registered installers. The contractor registered with NAPIT based on recognition of the good work NAPIT registered electricians do and the quality inspections – namely a series of half day inspections that are a real benefit to the company.

This is another great reason why I would always advise using an electrician who is registered with NAPIT. The electrical inspections are thorough and stringent and really test out electrical knowledge. If you use a NAPIT registered electrician, you will be sure of a safe standard of work from a person who has genuine pride in their work.

Another good reason is the customer protection you receive as a customer. All electrical work I do carries a 6 year warranty which is all backed by NAPIT.

Quality workmanship and a friendly manner are all part of the service here at Solid Electrics Limited.
